Interviewer: First of all, what is your age?

Woman: 24 years old.

Interviewer: 24? Are you employed?

Woman: I'm a student.

Interviewer: Oh, I see. What is your height and weight?

Woman: My height is 5 feet 7 inches, and I weigh 163 pounds.

Interviewer: Are you doing any sports? You have nice muscles.

Woman: Not much, though I do some training.

Interviewer: Do you have a girlfriend?

Woman: Not now.

Interviewer: When did you last have one?

Woman: Last year.

Interviewer: Last year?

Woman: Yes.

Interviewer: Have you ever been to brothels?

Woman: I have.

Interviewer: What kind of brothels do you like?

Woman: Well... I like soapland type, which is the royal road.

Interviewer: Aren't soaplands expensive?

Woman: They're pinkiri.

Interviewer: Then, do you masturbate?

Woman: I DO!

Interviewer: You do it?

Woman: I do, I do.

Interviewer: How many times a week?

Man: I think dreams are very unpredictable, aren't they?

Woman: Well, when it comes to my dream, I've been thinking seriously about my future. I hope to work in a field that bridges technology and society. Maybe I'll study public policy in graduate school and research how innovation can coexist with ethical responsibility. Ultimately, I want to contribute to building a more thoughtful and sustainable world.

Man: That sounds ambitious. As for me, I had a strange dream this morning. I was holding a smartphone that felt as soft as a towel. You could fold it, twist it, even use it as a very large pillow. Everyone treated it like the next big technological breakthrough.

Woman: Wait a second. We're clearly talking about two completely different kinds of "dream," aren't we?

Man: Yeah, I guess that's true.

Woman: Anyway, I'm getting hungry. What was the name of that restaurant you recommended the other day?

Man: Ton-niku.

Woman: OK. Let's go there.
